Leah looked out the window at the tiny white flakes falling from the sky. Her eyes lit up and she smiled wide. Leah grabbed her coat and ran outside. She put her hands up and spun around. This was her favorite part of winter. Leah giggled and lay down in the snow. She slid her arms and legs back and forth then jumped up and stared at the shape her body made in the snow. Leah looked up just in time to see her neighborhood friend tossing something in her direction. Something cold and wet hit Leah's head, and they both laughed.
